

$35,000 Fine for Not Training Worker Killed in Snowmobile Crash

Delivering proper safety training might have saved the life of the worker who got killed after being thrown from a snowmobile, especially since operating the snowmobile was outside the victim's normal job duties. Training would also have saved the employer $35,000 it has to pay after pleading guilty to an OHS violation Alsport Sales Inc., [Govt. Press Release, January 18, 2021].
