

COVID-19, School Reopening & Family Status Accommodations Under Human Rights Laws

Date: Oct 6, 2020

Duration: 51 minutes

Presenter: Hilary Page and Danielle Murray from Spring Law

About the Webinar

In some form or another, it's looking like in-person learning will be going ahead this school year but that parents can keep their children home if they wish. In many cases, employers whose operations have been remote for the past several months are looking to bring employees back to the office. What if an employee doesn't want to send their child back to school and subsequently insists that they cannot, therefore, come back into the office to work? What are an employer's options?

About the Speaker

Hilary Page brings a diverse legal background to her employment law practice. She started her career summering with a litigation boutique in downtown Toronto and then articulated in-house at a municipality, where she developed an interest in workplace and human rights law.
