

OHS Fines Scorecard (August 15 to September 15)

There were only 8 reported OHS fines of $25,000 and over across Canada from mid-August to mid-September, the lowest of any 4-week period this year. The lull is likely a blip that’s due more to the summer slowdown in fine reporting rather than actual enforcement activity. Based on previous year’s patterns, we expect to see a surge in reported fine volumes during the autumn months to make up for the summer lag.

Fine amounts were also down at $1,170,446. This is, by far, the lowest 4-week total of 2025, and nearly $400,000 behind the previous low of $1.565 million in May to June. The average fine amount for the period was $146,306, which is in the middle of the pack for 2025 monthly averages. However, that average was significantly inflated by a single high outlier fine from BC. The other 7 reported fines during the period were significantly below the overall yearly fine average of $169,293.

6-Figure OHS Fines

Roughly half of all significant OHS fines reported in 2025 have totaled $100,000 or more. But only 2 of the 8 reported significant OHS fines from mid-August to mid-September were in the 6-figure range. Still, one of those fines is the fifth highest total for the entire year—$674,445 against a BC cement plant for a series of high-risk violations stemming from a fatal injury to a worker struck by debris from a large fan that failed after having been refitted just 5 months earlier.

BC continues to lead Canada for highest OHS fines, accounting for 6 of the year's Top 10 including numbers 1 through 5. Alberta is the next best represented province with 2 of the Top 10. While Ontario imposes the most OHS fines of any province, only one of those has cracked the Top 10. Saskatchewan is the only other province to have reported a Top 10 OHS fine in 2025.

Table 2. Top 10 OHS Fines of 2025
(through September 15)

	Fine Amount	Province	Type of Company/Incident	Result

BC and Ontario were the only provinces to report a 6-figure OHS fine in the mid-August to mid-September period with just one apiece. Despite having only one of the year's Top 10,

Ontario has imposed the most total 6-figure fines for the entire year with 23, which is well ahead of second place Alberta at 17. BC is close behind with 16. Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia are the only other provinces that have reported OHS fines in the 6 figures in 2025. Of course, we can't account for the other jurisdictions such as Québec where we know OHS enforcement is robust but fines aren't publicly reported.

Overall OHS Fines

For the second month in a row, Ontario did not report the most significant OHS fines during the recent period. As it did last month, BC was the leader with 3. The Ontario Ministry of Labour reported only 2 OHS fines in mid-August to mid-September. It's almost impossible to believe that fine volume in Ontario won't pick up significantly in the fall. Québec, which doesn't report its OHS fines, was still represented this month thanks to a reported court ruling involving an OHS fine. Alberta and Saskatchewan accounted for the other reported OHS fines during the period. Here's a breakdown of all the significant OHS fines from the period.

Table 4. OHS Fines Reported August 15 to September 15, 2025* ($25,000 or more)

* BC OHS fines get reported a month late but are included in the most recent period to ensure continuity and consistency for comparison purposes across all provinces.

 Penalties imposed after a trial rather than a guilty plea or as an Administrative Monetary Penalty.
