

OHS Fines Scorecard for 2024 (October 16 to November 13)

After 2 consecutive slow months, reported OHS fines spiked up dramatically from mid-October to mid-November. In fact, the period between October 16 to November 13 was the biggest of the year so far in terms of both fine volume and fine amounts. Of the 19 significant OHS fines reported, 11 were in the 6-figure range. Bottom Line: Over 45% of all reported OHS fines during the year have totaled $100,000 or more.

Saskatchewan was the epicenter of OHS enforcement activity during the period by handing out 2 of the 5 biggest OHS fines reported in 2024. That includes the year’s highest fine—$840,000 against Saskatchewan Power Corporation after a trial convicting the company of 3 OHS violations leading to the death of 2 workers in a fall from the bucket of a bucket truck. That’s the biggest OHS fine ever recorded in Saskatchewan, easily surpassing the previous record of $560,000 levied against a cement company in 2019. And it could have been worse. The Crown asked the court for a $2.1 million sentence—$700,000 per violation—given SaskPower’s size and the magnitude of the offence. But the court settled on $840,000 in light of mitigating factors, including the company’s relatively strong safety record with only 1 OHS conviction in over a decade and the fact that the victims contributed to the tragedy by not clipping the D ring of their safety belt lanyard to the fall protection anchor in the bucket truck.

Saskatchewan also handed out the most 6-figure fines with 3, including the period’s second biggest fine and fourth highest of the year. As fate would have it, SaskPower was also on the receiving end of this fine totaling $700,000 for failing to ensure that equipment and personnel kept the required minimum distance away from an exposed energized electrical conductor resulting in serious injuries to a worker. BC also accounted for 3 fines of over $100,000, including a $274,000 penalty against a Penticton hospital for exposing workers to an unknown hazardous substance. Alberta reported 2 fines in the 6-figure range, including penalties of $350,000 and $200,000 against separate employers for incidents resulting in fatal falls. The other 6-figure fines came from Ontario, Nova Scotia, and Nunavut.

While Ontario leads the nation for the most 6-figure OHS fines reported in 2024 with 17, only one of the 10 biggest fines of the year has come from that province. Alberta has imposed far fewer overall fines than Ontario but 13 of them have been for $100,000 or more, including the sixth highest OHS fine of 2024. BC has accounted for 12 reported fines in the 6-figure fine range, including the second and third largest fines of the year. Saskatchewan has asserted its presence with 8 reported OHS fines of $100,000 or more, including the year's biggest and fourth biggest. Northwest Territories and Nunavut haven't handed out many fines but the ones they have levied have made an impact with 3 in the 6-figure range. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are the only other jurisdictions that have reported a 6-figure OHS fine in 2024.

Overall OHS Fines

In terms of fine volume, BC handed out the most fines of the period with 8. But that number is somewhat deceptive because it actually reflects 2 months' worth of volume given the province didn't report its October results until November. Saskatchewan accounted for 4 of this month's reported 19 fines. Ontario and Alberta were the only other jurisdictions to report multiple fines during the period with 2 apiece.
