

OHS Fines Scorecard (March 15 to April 15)

There were 12 significant reported OHS fines of over $25,000 in Canada in the 4-week period from mid-March to mid-April, which is 3 more than last month and exactly the average fine volume during the first 4 periods of 2025. However, total fine amounts were $2.029 million, the third lowest of the year. At just below $170,000, average OHS fines were also down and below the monthly average of $182,500 for the entire year. Here are the OHS fine totals for the first 4 months of 2025.

6-Figure OHS Fines

Five of the 12 reported significant OHS fines during the period totaled $100,000 or more. But that number is somewhat deceptive to the extent that 3 of those fines came from the same case. Even so, of the 48 significant fines reported for the year, 25 have been in the 6-figure range.

For the first time in 3 months, the biggest fine of the period didn't come from BC. Alberta stole this month's spotlight by imposing over $1.2 million in total fines against 3 different companies for the same incident involving a crane fatality, including the biggest fine of the period and fourth biggest of the year—$495,000 against Suncor for a crane rigging violation. The other 2 companies were hit with fines of $374,000 apiece, number 5 on this year's Top 10 OHS fines list. It's worth noting that all 3 of the companies made a plea deal, agreeing to plead guilty to one charge in exchange for the dropping of multiple other charges.

BC and Ontario reported the only other 6-figure fines during the period in cases involving serious injuries but not fatalities. Five of this year's Top 11 OHS fines have come from BC. Alberta has 4 of the Top 10 and Ontario 2.

Alberta has now tied Ontario for the most reported 6-figure fines of the year. BC is close behind with 7. Somewhat surprisingly, no other jurisdiction has yet reported a 6-figure OHS fine in 2025.

Overall OHS Fines

For the second straight month, BC handed out the most significant OHS fines of the period with 5, followed by Ontario and Alberta with 3 apiece. Québec accounted for the only other significant fine in a case that actually went to trial before the employer pleaded guilty.
