About This Webinar

Senior leaders don’t need every detail from the safety department. They do need to understand the OHS risks that could expose the organization, its officers, and its workers to serious consequences. That includes unresolved hazards, repeat incidents, weak supervision, overdue corrective actions, inspection readiness gaps, training and competency concerns, and patterns that suggest the safety system isn’t controlling risk as intended.

The challenge is translation. Safety professionals often see the risk clearly, but leadership may only see injury rates, claims costs, audit scores, or budget requests. A good executive OHS briefing connects those dots. It explains where the organization is exposed, what the evidence shows, what could happen if the risk isn’t addressed, and what decisions leadership needs to make.

This OHS Insider webinar will help safety professionals prepare a practical executive and officer OHS briefing for 2027 planning. We'll cover the risk categories to include, how to frame due diligence and governance obligations, what documentation matters, how to avoid overwhelming leaders with technical detail, and how to turn safety concerns into clear business decisions.
