

Workplace Violence – 2023 Year in Review

FEDERAL

LAWS & ANNOUNCEMENTS

Jan 31: Newly tabled Bill C-311 would amend the Criminal Code to make assaulting or causing physical or emotional harm to a woman knowing that she's pregnant aggravated circumstances that judges must consider in sentencing.

Action Point: Use the extensive resources on the OHSI Workplace Violence Compliance Center to protect your workers from violence and harassment.

Apr 27: Newly passed Bill C-233 requires judges to consider, before issuing a release order for a person accused of an offense against their intimate partner, to consider whether to require the person to wear an electronic monitoring device “in the interests of the safety and security of any person.”

Action Point: Implement an effective domestic violence prevention and response policy at your workplace.

May 2: Debate resumed on controversial legislation (Bill C-21) to strengthen criminal law bans and import controls on handguns and assault rifles and increase penalties, including confiscations of guns, for violations.

Action Point: Use the extensive resources on the OHSI Workplace Violence Compliance Center to protect your workers from violence and harassment.

Jun 1: The Assembly passed and the Senate is debating controversial legislation (Bill C-21) to strengthen criminal law bans and import controls on handguns and assault rifles and increase penalties, including confiscations of guns, for violations. The bill would also make the national freeze on the sale, purchase and transfer of handguns that was imposed in October 2022 permanent.

Jun 21: The Senate is just one vote away from doing what the Assembly has already done, namely passing controversial legislation (Bill C-21) to strengthen criminal law bans and import controls on handguns and assault rifles and increase penalties, including confiscations of guns, for violations. The bill would also make the national freeze on the sale, purchase and transfer of handguns that was imposed in October 2022 permanent.

CASES

Workplace Violence: OK to Terminate Worker for Pushing, Threatening Security Guard

A worker violated company policy by accidentally bringing her daughter's cell phone to the workplace. But the reason she got fired was how she reacted after the device was spotted on the x-ray scanner at the facility entrance by deliberately pushing the guard who asked her to empty her bag and then violently swinging her open knapsack scattering its contents across the floor. The federal arbitrator ruled that the company had just cause to terminate the worker for violating not only the cell phone but also the respectful workplace policy [Teamsters, Local 938 v Purolator Inc., 2022 CanLII 112111 (CA LA), November 15, 2022].

Workplace Violence: Employer Can't Prove Worker Threatened Coworkers with Violence

A railway fired a senior maintenance engineer for threatening violence against coworkers if he had to take the COVID vaccine. The railway's principal evidence was an email from a coworker quoting the engineer as saying "If I have to hurt people, I will." The engineer vehemently denied making this or any remarks or threats of violence. The federal arbitrator ruled that the railway didn't meet its burden of proving that the engineer engaged in workplace violence and reinstated him with no loss of seniority [IBEW \(System Council No. 11\) v Canadian National Railway Company, 2023 CanLII 99782 (CA LA), October 30, 2023].

CASES

Workplace Violence: Employer Fined $355,000 for Failing to Properly Investigate Violence Incidents

In what may be the biggest fine of its kind, WorkSafeBC hit a health region with a $355,244 administrative monetary penalty for failing to properly investigate incidents of workplace violence against a worker. WorkSafeBC inspectors reviewed the investigation reports created in response to several incidents and found that they all lacked key information such as with regard to underlying causes and corrective actions [Northern Health Authority, WorkSafeBC Report, November 10, 2022].

Workplace Violence: No Evidence Race Factored into Decision to Fire Worker for Fighting

A forklift operator at a warehouse got into a physical altercation with a co-worker. He claimed he was provoked but after interviewing the parties and witnesses, the investigator concluded that both combatants were equally at fault. The operator claimed race, colour and ancestry discrimination but the BC Human Rights Tribunal found no evidence to support the claim and dismissed the complaint. The operator was fired for fighting and there was no evidence that race, colour or ancestry factored into the decision, it concluded [Jhawar v. Wallace and Carey Inc. and others, 2023 BCHRT 60 (CanLII), June 20, 2023].

Workplace Violence: Hospital's Failure to Protect Doctor from Patient Attack Is Not Negligence

A psychiatrist who suffered devastating injuries as a result of being attacked by an inpatient at a mental health hospital sued the facility's operator for negligently failing to address the risk of violence by patients citing, among other things, its failure to perform a workplace violence risk assessment. The trial court was unimpressed finding that a hazard assessment wouldn't have made any difference and that the psychiatrist knew the patient was violent and voluntarily assumed the risk by agreeing to meet with him alone. Faulting the hospital for not adopting a policy banning doctors from visiting violent patients without accompaniment would potentially interfere with proper psychiatric care, the court reasoned. The BC Court of Appeal found the lower court's reluctance to author a new standard of care for psychiatric treatment without expert evidence reasonable and refused to overturn it [Sheoran v. Interior Health Authority, 2023 BCCA 318 (CanLII), August 8, 2023].

CASES

Workplace Violence: Visit to ER Doesn't Count as Hospital Admission for Injury Benefits Purposes

After getting punched in the face by a passenger, a City of Mississauga bus driver goes to the hospital emergency room where he's assessed, advised to take Tylenol for his wounds and sent home. The police confirm that the driver was assaulted. The question is whether he's entitled to benefits for time missed as a result of the incident. At issue is the following language from the collective agreement providing for benefits to an employee that “is absent from work by reason of an on-duty serious physical assault, by a member of the public. . . confirmed by Police and is admitted to a hospital," (emphasis added). The City denied the driver benefits because he wasn't "admitted" and the Ontario arbitrator agreed. Although what happened to the driver was "terrible and life-altering," the fact is that he was never "admitted" to the hospital and thus didn't qualify for benefits. "Admitted" means being assigned a bed and/or room in the hospital for further observation and treatment, the arbitrator reasoned [Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1572 v Mississauga \(City\), 2023 CanLII 44247 (ON LA), May 23, 2023].

Action Point: Implement a legally sound policy to protect workers from domestic violence at the workplace.

CASES

Workplace Violence: No Reinstatement for Worker Who Threatens His Boss

"You're going to pay for this." Those are the words that a journeyman cable-fitter assembler uttered to his boss at least 4 times right after receiving a negative performance review. The company took the phrase as a death threat and fired the cable-fitter. While the employer couldn't prove that "you're going to pay" was a death threat, the words were clearly threatening and designed to intimidate, the Québec arbitrator concluded, noting that the employee also took over the conversation and wouldn't allow anybody else in the meeting to speak. Accordingly, it rejected the union's request for reinstatement [International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers \(IAMAW\), Local 1660 c ABB INC., 2023 CanLII 2082 (QC SAT), January 12, 2023].

Workplace Violence: Employer Didn't Protect Worker from Psychological Harassment

It was just one incident, but it was enough to make the employer guilty of failing to protect an employee against psychological harassment. It occurred when a cafeteria worker at a detention center was physically attacked by a co-worker who placed his hands around her neck and choked her, in retaliation for supposedly barring the bathroom door to prevent the aggressor from using the space to say his daily prayers. In addition to being extremely scary, the attack, which occurred in the presence of the victim's daughter, left visible red markings on her neck. The attacker claimed it was all a joke. And when management took no action, the union sued. The Quebec arbitrator agreed that the employer trivialized the incident and upheld the psychological harassment grievance [Union of Public and Parapublic Employees of Quebec v Government of Quebec – Ministry of Public Security, 2023 CanLII 73712 (QC SAT), August 7, 2023].

CASES

Workplace Violence: Wrongfully Dismissed Worker Gets Damages, Not Reinstatement

A long running feud between 2 families in which all 4 spouses worked at the same poultry plant escalated into a physical fight that occurred away from the work site. One of the employees was charged with criminal assault for provoking the incident. The plant terminated that employee but without asking him for his side of the story or getting to the bottom of what happened. The arbitrator ruled that the employer didn't have just cause to terminate but awarded money damages instead of reinstatement. The employer claimed the arbitrator's ruling on termination was wrong; the union claimed its ruling on damages rather than reinstatement was wrong. The Saskatchewan court opted for none of the above, finding the arbitrator's ruling reasonable on all counts and dismissing both appeals [United Food and Commercial Workers, Local 1400 v Prairie Pride Natural Foods Ltd., 2022 SKKB 274 (CanLII), December 19, 2022].
